Abstract

Methods for teaching research ethics and integrity must meet the challenges presented by a complex and changing world of research and its impacts. Presently across Europe, there is a lack of general guidelines on how to teach research integrity, and great differences in teaching approaches, topics covered, learning aims and levels of engagement. INTEGRITY is an H2020 project focusing on developing high quality training in research integrity with innovative modes of engagement, aiming to empower future researchers in Responsible Conduct in Research. This 3-year project, which started at the beginning of 2019, gathers a consortium of 11 European partners from 9 countries, led by University of Utrecht (the Netherlands). INTEGRITY starts from the conviction that we need to build capacities of young students and researchers and help them learn to reflect and account for their actions. Therefore, INTEGRITY's approach focuses on building students' capacity at three levels of study (i.e. high school, undergraduate and graduate levels), covering all ranges of scholarly disciplines. INTEGRITY's starting-point consists on evaluating European students' perceptions and needs in research integrity, to identify, map and evaluate current understandings and gaps in knowledge, particularly regarding misconduct and grey-zone areas in academic pursuits. This analysis will form the evidence-platform for the development of innovative and effective teaching tools, tailored to the needs of students in their respective study phase and focus discipline. Teaching tools will be developed for high school students, undergraduate students, and PhD students.

In this conference presentation, we will focus specifically on the tools developed for high school students. This task is coordinated by Trinity College Dublin (Ireland) with the collaboration of the University of Ljubljana (Slovenia) and the Institute for Research and Innovation in Health (Portugal). Our vision in developing teaching tools for high school students seeks the early empowerment of these students as future university students. At high school, students experience a transdisciplinary curriculum. Therefore, our approach will focus on the transdisciplinary nature of research integrity that can be found in areas such as environmental and life sciences, arts, technology, social sciences, among others. We will develop a scenario-case-based approach of life situations that students experience to promote their critical thinking and empowerment on integrity education. The teaching programme will be designed as a module-based system which can take different formats. We will co-design our teaching modules in collaboration with high school teachers of each country, which will allow us to tailor our modules to students' needs and to make them more appealing. Furthermore, we will incorporate these modules online, so both students and teachers can use it at the classroom or freely at home. Our teaching modules will be tested with the students and improvements will be made accordingly. A final version of the teaching tools will be available late 2021. At the conference we will present examples of a prototype tool with focus on the life sciences.

Abstract

The training was organised as part of the VIRT2UE, a H2020 project aiming to create a virtue-based train-the-trainer programme for ethics and research integrity trainers. The training focused on building moral virtues that allow researchers to act with integrity and apply the principles of the European Code of Conduct for Research Integrity in concrete situations.

2. Project events

Consortium wide events

From the 29th to the 30th of January 2020, the 2nd Annual Meeting of the H2020 INTEGRITY Project took place in the beautiful and historical campus of the University of Vilnius, Lithuania. The 11 European Consortium partners gathered to discuss and analyse of the latest work and achievements from the past twelve months, and agreement of the next steps. Interactive sessions for the teaching modules were conducted, where key discussions and sharing of ideas were made to promote the development of effective teaching tools and the next stages of the project.

On the 4th June, the EU project review meeting with the Project Officer Roberta Monachello and External Reviewer Stefania Bocconi along with the representatives of the 11 consortium partners. The project coordinator and each WP leader presented the work and progress within the project, followed by questions and feedback from the external reviewer and the scientific officer. A discussion on project progress and changes to make in order to optimize output and communication ensured. The meeting took place over webex.

Throughout the year, there have been bimonthly General Assemblies (GA) with the project coordinator and a representative of each consortium member, to review progress and make decisions. These meetings have been organised as teleconferences.

Work Package focused meetings

Throughout the year, regular meetings have been organised between the respective partners participating in WPs 3, 4 and 6, focusing on the work within these work packages. The majority of these meetings have been in a teleconference format. For specific details on dates and participants, see the list below.
